your duty of disclosure

The duty of disclosure is an important legal requirement which applies to insurance. To help you understand what this means to you we have explained the main points below:

When you apply for insurance you have a special legal duty of disclosure. This means you must tell us all information you know (or could reasonably be expected to know) which would influence the judgment of a prudent underwriter:

1. Whether or not to accept your application, and if it accepted, on what terms and what cost.
2. You also have the duty each time your insurance renews, and whenever you make any changes to it.

Examples of information you may need to disclose include:

1. any circumstances which could increase the risk of an insurance claim;
2. any criminal offence;
3. any cancellation, refusal to renew, or imposing of special terms by another insurance company;
4. any insurance claim you have made in the past.

Examples of information you do not need to disclose include:

1. anything you have already told us, or that we should be expected to know in the ordinary course of our business;
2. anything we said you did not need to tell us when you applied for insurance;
3. anything that reduces the risk of an insurance claim;
4. anything that is common knowledge.

These examples are intended as a guide to help you understand your duty of disclosure. If you are not sure whether you need to disclose a particular piece of information, please ask. If you fail to meet your duty of disclosure, the consequences can be serious. You may find that you do not have any insurance cover at all.
